SOME SMILES

This took place in a certain country ruled by a very powerful dictator. What he wants done – better be done, or else. And that can mean banishment, imprisonment, or you face a firing squad. He wanted a railroad built to the eastern borders of his country. He took a sheet of paper, a ruler, and a pen. Then he drew a straight line.

"A straight line is the shortest distance between two points," he announced. "Follow this line and build my railroad that way."

He wasn't a bit interested in the sad fact that the tracks had to cross a marshland. And would vanish every now and then. And that part of the tracks went under a mountain that would collapse from time to time. And some sections of the track went through the snow lands – with snowslides burying the tracks. It was finally built.

With such a railroad you can easily understand why some trains never got to the terminal point. And others arrived late. He invited the foreign press to the terminal point to see that the trains did follow a schedule – to the minute And sure enough, on a Tuesday at 10:05 in the morning the train from the capital arrived right on the second.

The dictator embraced the engineer. Pinned a medal on him as the crowd cheered wildly.

"How did you do it?" he whispered into the engineer's ear.

"We were due last Tuesday at 10 :05," whispered back the honest engineer.

You are having a wonderful dream. A genuine genie has taken you into the U. S. Mint and told you to help yourself to all the money you can carry. Just as you are stuffing a bag with bills of $10,000 denominations, the phone rings

"Is this John?" the voice at the other end asks at 3:24 A. M.

"No it isn't!" you reply in a tone that is half sleepy and half angry.

"I don't believe you at all," continues the voice. "You can't fool me. You must be John."

You hang up. The phone rings again. You don't answer it. But it finally stops. Alas, you and many others like you – can't seem to fall asleep again. Even though you close your eyes, all you get are red spots – and no genie.

They tell me the experts are trying to figure out a foolproof system so you can't have somebody get a wrong number. Hope it comes along soon. This conversation took place at 1:17 A.M.

"Hello, is this seven three three-six nine eight one?"

"Sorry, this is seven hundred three-sixty nine eighty one."

"Oh, I too am so sorry."

"What are you sorry about?"

"That I did wake you with the wrong phone number."

"Forget it. You didn't wake me. I always awaken when my phone rings at night."

"Thanks a lot for saying that. Makes me feel better. Would you mind telling me who you are?"

"Not at all. The receiving clerk at the city morgue."

On their honeymoon they went to one of our famous National Parks. The Bears posed for pictures. The Sun came out every day. She had a good time buying little gifts to bring back East. And on their last day there, he stopped in front of a wigwam. The sign read. "Chief Know-it-all. Never makes a mistake. Never forgets a person. Only one question answered for 25 cents."

So he went inside and put his quarter on the table. And his question was simple:

"What did I have for breakfast?"

"Eggs," replied the Chief with a smile. "And again I am correct."

He admitted it and then went outside and said that this Chief must have some kind of second sight.

"Don't be foolish," laughed his wife as she took out her handkerchief. "You have some egg stains on your face."

Twenty years passed He was half bald now and she had put on some forty pounds. But they were still in love with each other. He won a prize and it was a trip to the same National Park. To his surprise the wigwam was there The sign almost the same Except that the price was now fifty cents

"I think I will have some fun with that Chief." he told his wife

So he went inside and put fifty cents on the table and he raised his palm to the chief and said but one word. "How?"

"Scrambled," replied the Chief with a smile "And again I am correct
